Every characteristic carries its supplier source and its date	The customer decides on data that stands up, and the 187 unsourced characteristics are listed for you before a dispute finds them
A missing field stays visible, with what is missing and who to ask	You know what to claim from the supplier, instead of discovering the gap on the first customer complaint
The page arrives written, sourced, ready to publish	Publication stays signed by whoever answers for it — that is what protects you, and it takes a second instead of a writing session
Price and availability are read from their source system on every display	No page announces a price the till contradicts
The reviews shown stay your customers' own	The trust that sells the catalogue rests on this: a fake review gets spotted, and it costs more than it returns
