Fictional document — demonstration example

This document is produced by the Blue Lemon Agent website to illustrate what an AI agent hands to its users. The companies, matters, amounts and people in it are invented. It has no legal, accounting or commercial value.

Fictional document, produced for demonstration. The first flag concerns how the agent is being used, not the documents.

#	Flag	What triggered it	At stake	Recipient	Chase
1	41 documents never opened in full	Opening log	7 contracts, 4 expert reports	Their recipient	One alert only
2	7 contract summaries before signature	Document type	3 signed without reading	Whoever will sign	—
3	1 exception lost to compression	Comparison with the source	A clause reversed	Flagged in the summary	—
4	Return-to-source rate: 12%	The agent's own measure	Aid or substitute	Whoever steers	Monthly

> One alert only on a binding document, then silence. Chasing somebody to read a document would be badgering them, and the agent has no business measuring a person's reading.

What the summary guarantees the person who signs

What the agent guarantees	What it spares you
Figures, dates, conditions and durations are carried over identically from the document	The summary maps onto the source: no rewording can make the contract say anything other than what it says
A wrong figure in the document is flagged, never quietly repaired	You see the error and have it fixed where it lives: the summary stays enforceable against the document
Currencies and units are given exactly as the document states them	No implicit conversion slips into a negotiation: you convert at the rate and date you choose
What was left out is written into the summary	You know what you have not read, and that is the only way to use a summary without risk
A document aimed personally at its recipient is handed to them in full	The right to see it is served to the letter, and your procedure cannot be challenged on that ground
The return-to-source rate, 12%, is published as it stands, every month	You steer on a measure the agent cannot flatter: that is what makes every other figure of its own credible
