Fictional document — demonstration example

This document is produced by the Blue Lemon Agent website to illustrate what an AI agent hands to its users. The companies, matters, amounts and people in it are invented. It has no legal, accounting or commercial value.

Fictional document, produced for demonstration. The statement comes in three parts, from best established to least. That is deliberate: a client can reject the third without it touching the first.

Part I — sums due (€27,400)

Nine items instructed in writing or named in site minutes. Each line refers to its document, reproduced in the appendix. This part invites no discussion on principle: at most, a discussion on amount.

Part II — arguable sums (€14,200)

Six items requested by email from the contract administrator, without pricing. The request is written and dated; the absence of a price does not erase the order. This part is arguable, and it argues better separated from the third.

Part III — sums not established (€18,400)

Eight items of which only three leave an indication — two time-stamped photographs and a materials delivery note that only makes sense if the work happened. These are not instructions, they are indications, and they are presented as such. The other five rest on nothing and are not dressed up.

> Why part three appears at all. Dropping it entirely would mean giving up three items that do leave a trace. Mixing it into the first two would cast doubt on the other sixteen. Separating it is the only tenable position — and the statement says so, in as many words.
