Fictional document — demonstration example

This document is produced by the Blue Lemon Agent website to illustrate what an AI agent hands to its users. The companies, matters, amounts and people in it are invented. It has no legal, accounting or commercial value.

Fictional document, produced for the demonstration. The user's say-so is asked field by field before anything is entered. The eight screens that make people give up are rewritten by the agent and put on the table with their figures; putting them live is signed by the portal team — it is that signature that commits the accessibility of the procedure.

What a guided session does

| Move                           | Content                                                    |
|--------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------|
| Reading the current screen     | The agent starts where the person is, not at the beginning |
| Explaining the question | In everyday words, not the form's words             |
| Document expected              | Which one, in what form, and how to photograph it legibly  |

| Move                    | Content                                                                                        |
|-------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Offering the front desk | As soon as it is the shortest route for the family — without them having to explain themselves |

Abandonments, and where they happen

The same screen produces two effects measured in two places: it causes 71% of procedure abandonments and it is behind 50 of the 63 groundless discrepancy flags of the same quarter. A form defect is never fully visible from a single workstation.

The eight screens rewritten by the agent, measured over 4,720 procedures

| Screen                  | Abandonments over 12 months | With the rewrite | Families who see it through |
|-------------------------|-----------------------------|------------------|-----------------------------|
| Income screen    | 660                  | 168       | 492                  |
| The seven other screens | 120                         | 31        | 89                   |

| Screen            | Abandonments over 12 months | With the rewrite | Families who see it through |
|-------------------|-----------------------------|------------------|-----------------------------|
| All eight screens | 780 — 84% of abandonments   | 199              | 581                         |

What the rewrite touches: labels, entry help and the order of questions — in the form of the office's own portal and without changing a single item of data requested.

What is left to decide: going live — the portal team settles it in one meeting, on measured figures and on screens that are already written.

And guidance is not restricted to the digital channel: it also works by telephone and ends with a front-desk appointment if the person asks.

Public service is not an online queue. The aim is not to push more procedures through the portal, but that no family gives up an entitlement because a screen defeated them.
