Fictional document — demonstration example

This document is produced by the Blue Lemon Agent website to illustrate what an AI agent hands to its users. The companies, matters, amounts and people in it are invented. It has no legal, accounting or commercial value.

Fictional document, produced for the demonstration. One note a month, six pages, and nothing in between — except what changes the answer to a question being handled. No real decision is cited: the attachment shows what the monitoring produces and what it triggers.

What the month's note contains

Section	Volume this month	Handling
New decisions on the 9 questions	4	—
of which confirming the state of the question	3	One line each

Section	Volume this month	Handling
of which departing from it	1	One page: facts, reasoning adopted, and the pending files concerned
Pending files where the same question arises	3	Named by their case number
Amendments to provisions now in force	2	With the date of entry into force
Pending cases whose facts predate them	17	For each, the applicable wording is the earlier one

The case number is the number under which a case is registered and tracked from beginning to end. It is what turns document monitoring into usable information: the note does not only say what has moved, it says in which of the court's files that changes something.

What the agent does on top, without being asked

Action	What it produced this month	What is handed over
Goes back over notes already delivered in the light of new publications	2 notes less than a year old concerned	The paragraph to reread highlighted, and the updated version already written
Measures the yield of each monitored question	1 question in 9 has produced nothing for four months	A proposal to replace it, with 3 candidates drawn from the quarter's search count

A research note that ages without saying so is the only flaw a well-made search can have — and it corrects itself once monitoring is in place.
