The recording is erased as soon as the minutes are approved	Nothing survives that could be replayed for something else: your meetings keep the free speech that makes them useful
Minutes, not a full transcript	You re-read what was decided rather than everything that was said, and no verbatim circulates in the company
Decisions and actions carry a name; opinions and objections do not	People can still hesitate aloud in your meetings, and that is exactly what makes a meeting worth holding
The 41% of actions with no owner arrive marked "owner to be confirmed", read at the top of the next meeting	Across 840 actions, those with no name show up in one line: the owner is named in the room, and they do get named
What is counted is meetings and actions	Your teams adopt the tool instead of guarding against it — the condition for them to put their actions into it
